- Balasore, a small town in the east coast of India, was battered by Cyclone Philine in the last weekend. The cyclone came from the Bay of Bengal. It was the result of a low pressure area developing in the sea. From a location a few hundred kilometers off the coast, Cyclone Philine gradually moved towards the land. The wind speed was nearly 220 kilometers per hour. The violent wind hit villages near the coastline with deadly force. Mud houses were flattened, trees uprooted and power lines were reduced to tangled heaps of wire. Fortunately, weather radars tracked the Philine doggedly as a result of which people were evacuated from their houses that fell in the projected path of Cyclone Philine. Millions of people were quickly moved to temporary shelters with remarkable efficiency. This reduced the death toll to negligible numbers. It was a remarkable success of disaster management in India. In another operation, the Coast Guard spotted a cargo ship at night that had tilted dangerously in the waters a few kilometers off Bengal. Responding to its SOS call, the Coast Guard rushed to its rescue and lifted out the sailors who were floating on their life boat in the dark near their ship.

Daltpant wallowed in his bed, dreamily. A terrible pain in the stomach had kept him awake late into the night. And then, what with the heavy monsters that rolled over his belly, the horse that galloped without neck or tail, the noise of the grand-child near him, the breathless flight in the air, funeral processions, death-drums, temples and rupees, and mimicking monkeys— he could not sleep. Every other wink he woke up, moaned, and turning away his head, threw his legs aside, and forced himself to sleep— but sleep would never come. Deep in the night he heard an owl hoot somewhere— somewhere very near. Was it from the coconut tree? The neem tree? No, it was from the roof, Death, said the elders, an owl on the tiles means certain death.... death before the wane of the evil moon. He would have liked to stand up and shout ‘Ram, Ram’ to frighten away the owl. But he felt tired and restless. After all, to wake up the whole house, make a noise, cry, moan. And move to another house. Where? And for six months too. He, his old wife, his two quarrelling sons, his haughty daughter-in-law, and the pulling, whining, slobbering brats. No. This could never be of me. Perhaps the owl was only on the palm-tree. No, it was not on the roof. For sure, no! However, let’s say ‘Ram, Ram’, ‘Ram, Ram’. Sleep will soon come and then everything will be forgotten.
